

Overview

Selling to the government is risky business. Contractors are faced with complex cost accounting and pricing regulations. The government has unilateral rights not found in commercial relationships. Contractors are subject to frequent government scrutiny and audits. Even honest errors and omissions can result in disputes or litigation. This places heavy demands on contractors in all industries. If you are found to have violated government regulations, the penalties can be significant – even if relatively small dollar amounts are at issue.

At the same time, the federal government is the largest purchaser of goods and services. Proper interpretation of complex regulations can help maximize your profitability in selling to this market. To succeed, you need experienced, professional assistance to improve your policies, systems, and procedures – and rethink the methodologies behind them. This support will help you achieve or maintain compliance with government regulations.
